

Navigator Fund Commentary
April 2021

For the month, Navigator was +0.87% in April and is +2.71% year-to-date.

Market Review

In April, realized volatility continued to drop lower. This was no surprise to the options markets which had an ascending implied market volatility term structure coming into the month – meaning traders expected higher volatility as the calendar turns to late spring and summer.

However, April had notable movement in the indices that track out-of-the-money put buying versus out-of-the-money call selling. For example, the S&P 500 CBOE SKEW Index was close to all-time highs at the end of April. This index essentially measures the demand for downside put protection relative to the upside supply of call options. In short, it offers the market's view of downside risk versus upside opportunity. There's some fear creeping back of a large downside move.

Further, correlations of nearly all asset classes remain relatively high. Diversifying agents within a portfolio are simply not easy to find in liquid instruments outside expensive put options or using VIX futures hedges. Equities, bonds, and high yield look more similar than different in their daily patterns. This is a trend that has been well-established and is unsurprising with yields near their all-time lows.

Despite these risks for broader markets, we believe the current Navigator strategy has the robustness to meet an unpredictable market even with high correlations of asset classes in a large sell-off. We believe the current Navigator strategy will continue to have a relatively low beta to equities and bond markets. The strategy simply seeks absolute positive return with an independent sequence of return to broader markets. Moreover, we do this by trading liquid contracts to allow for dynamic re-positioning as markets and risks change.

Sincerely yours,

Ben Warwick

Paul Strehle

Simultaneous with the commencement of the Fund’s investment operations on October 13, 2017, the Goldman Navigator Fund, L.P., a limited partnership managed by Mr. Steven Goldman, the Fund’s portfolio manager (the “Predecessor Partnership”), converted into the Institutional Class shares of the Fund by contributing all its assets to the Fund in exchange for Institutional Class shares of the Fund.

Performance data quoted prior to October 13, 2017, represents the past performance of the Goldman Navigator Fund, L.P., a limited partnership managed by Mr. Steven Goldman, the Fund’s portfolio manager (the “Predecessor Partnership”). From its inception in 2002 through 2012, the Predecessor Partnership was managed as a proprietary account of the portfolio manager and was converted to a limited partnership in 2012. From its inception on February 1, 2002, through October 13, 2017, the Predecessor Partnership maintained investment policies, objectives, guidelines, and restrictions that were, in all material respects, equivalent to those of the Fund, and at the time of the conversion, the Predecessor Partnership was managed by the same portfolio manager as the Fund.

Such portfolio manager managed the Predecessor Partnership since its inception in a manner that, in all material respects, complied with the investment guidelines and restrictions of the Fund. The Fund’s performance for periods before October 13, 2017, is that of the Predecessor Partnership and includes the expenses of the Predecessor Partnership. The performance includes gains or losses plus income and the reinvestment of all dividends and interest. All returns reflect the deduction of all actual fees and expenses, paid by the Predecessor Partnership, without provision for state or local taxes. If the Predecessor Partnership’s performance was adjusted to reflect the projected first-year expenses of the Fund, the performance for all periods would have been lower than that stated. The Mutual fund investing involves risk; principal loss is possible. Leveraging may exaggerate the effect on net asset value of any increase or decrease in the market value of a Fund’s portfolio. Investing in derivatives may subject the Fund to losses if the derivatives do not perform as expected. Short sales involve selling a security that a Fund borrows and does not own. Short sales carry significant risk, including the risk of loss if the value of a security sold short increases prior to the scheduled delivery date since a Fund must pay more for the security than it has received from the purchaser in the short sale. Futures contracts are subject to the same risks as the underlying investments that they represent, but also may involve risks different from, and possibly greater than, the risks associated with investing directly in the underlying investments. The Funds may invest in foreign securities which involve greater volatility and political, economic and currency risks and differences in accounting methods. This risk increases with emerging markets. Small and mid-size companies involve additional risks such as limited liquidity and greater volatility. Investments in futures may result in a substantial loss in a short period. The loss may be more than the original investment. One cannot invest directly in an index.

Investors should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses carefully before investing.
